Medical School

The first step in becoming an orthopedic surgeon is to complete medical school. During medical school, students will learn the basic sciences of medicine, as well as the clinical skills necessary to diagnose and treat patients. Students will also have the opportunity to rotate through different medical specialties, including orthopedics.

Residency

After medical school, orthopedic surgeons must complete a residency program. Residency programs typically last for five years, and they provide surgeons with the opportunity to gain experience in all aspects of orthopedics. During residency, surgeons will work under the supervision of experienced orthopedic surgeons and will be responsible for managing the care of patients with a wide range of orthopedic conditions.

Fellowship

After completing residency, some orthopedic surgeons may choose to pursue a fellowship. Fellowships are typically one- to two-year programs that provide surgeons with specialized training in a particular area of orthopedics, such as sports medicine, spine surgery, or pediatric orthopedics.
