Preacher Justice was born in Virginia in 1795. He grew up in a devout Christian family, and he was ordained as a Baptist minister at the age of 18. However, he soon felt the call of the wilderness, and he left his home to become a mountain man.

Preacher Justice spent the next several years trapping and exploring the Rocky Mountains. He was a skilled hunter, and he quickly became known for his ability to find game in even the most remote areas. He was also a gifted storyteller, and he would often entertain his fellow trappers with tales of his adventures.

In 1832, Preacher Justice was part of a group of trappers who were attacked by a band of Blackfoot Indians. Justice was wounded in the battle, but he managed to escape. He made his way back to civilization, where he told his story of the attack.

Justice's story helped to raise awareness of the dangers that mountain men faced. It also inspired a number of other men to become mountain men. Justice himself continued to trap and explore the West until his death in 1870.
