In "What the September Eleventh Families Asked and the 11 Commission Ignored," award-winning investigative journalist and author Dana Priest meticulously sifts through the commission's report and uncovers the startling inconsistencies and omissions that have cast doubt on its findings. Through interviews with family members, whistleblowers, and experts, Priest paints a vivid and deeply disturbing picture of the commission's failure to fully investigate certain aspects of the attacks.

Priest exposes the commission's reluctance to explore potential links between the hijackers and Saudi Arabia, despite the fact that 15 of the 19 hijackers were Saudi nationals. She also raises serious questions about the commission's handling of evidence related to the role of Pakistani intelligence in supporting the attacks. Furthermore, Priest reveals that the commission ignored warnings from whistleblowers within the FBI and CIA about Al-Qaeda's potential plans to target the United States.

Unanswered Questions and Controversies

Priest's book delves deeply into the specific questions that the 9/11 families asked the commission but received unsatisfying or evasive answers. These questions include:

- Why were the Federal Aviation Administration and the North American Aerospace Defense Command (NORAD) unable to prevent the hijacked planes from reaching their targets?
- How did the hijackers manage to obtain visas and training in the United States?
- Did the Bush administration ignore or downplay warnings about Al-Qaeda's plans prior to the attacks?

Priest's investigation also uncovers numerous controversies surrounding the commission's findings, including:

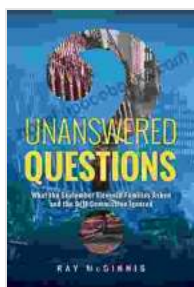

- The commission's reliance on classified information that was not made available to the public or to the families of the victims.
- Allegations that key witnesses were not interviewed or their testimony was misrepresented.
- The commission's failure to hold any government officials accountable for security failures leading up to the attacks.
